Highlining

Highlining means balancing & doing tricks on a slackline in big heights. This can be between mountains, buildings, cranes, bridges or cable cars.

I have started highlining in 2009. I am a slackline performer and athlete - not a daredevil. I am always secured when highlining and will never perform without safety leash. The entire setup is redundant and therefore 100% safe.

Commercial

Highlining is great to take beautiful pictures and videos and evokes powerful emotions due to fear of height of most people.

I can easily carry things in my hands while highlining. There are almost no limitations with the choice of location - I am open to always find a solution and do things that have never been tried before as long as it stays safe. I do have good contacts to spectacular locations in the mountains that can easily be reached with a big pile of camera equipment.

Highlining can be taken as a metaphor for:

- Trust
- Balance
- Connection / Bridge
- Skills
- Facing fears
- A huge Challenge

Highline-Show

I perform on Highlines at city festivals, sport events and other celebrations. All I need are buildings, cranes or bridges to fix my line in at least 10m height. I can perform to music or also do live-commenting from the Highline. I perform at daylight or with a LED-suit at night. The show consists of walking the highline, dance-moves and doing static and dynamic tricks on the line. I do have one of the most versatile styles of all highliners world wide.

I do have an insurance for highline shows.

Slackline Courses

I have given countless slackline courses. For sport teachers, physiotherapists and professional athletes. I've been teaching beginners how to do their first steps on the line but also how to set up and walk highlines.

I do have a Master degree in Human Movement Sciences ETH and have written my Master Thesis about balance training on the slackline. With this background I am also teaching professional athletes how to use the slackline for injury prevention or rehabilitation I do trainings with individual athletes or entire sport teams.
